IRON AND STEEL

The road has brought him somewhere different this season. After miles of forests, plains and open highways, the Petrol Man enters the industrial heart of America: Pennsylvania, a landscape shaped by steel, smoke and hard work.

Here, the sky once glowed with the light of molten metal. Railroads cut through valleys like iron veins. Dust hangs in the air, settling on clothes, machines and memories.

This is where the foundations of modern America were forged and it is here that the FW26 Iron & Steel collection finds its origin. FW26 is a tribute to the men who built, carried, and carved the world around them.

The Petrol Man drives his pick-up deeper into this world, moving from mills to railroads to quarries. Every stop reveals a different face of Iron & Steel and inspires the gear he wears: durable clothing, strong fabrics, denim-driven design, crafted for movement, for work and for life on the road.

THE MILLS

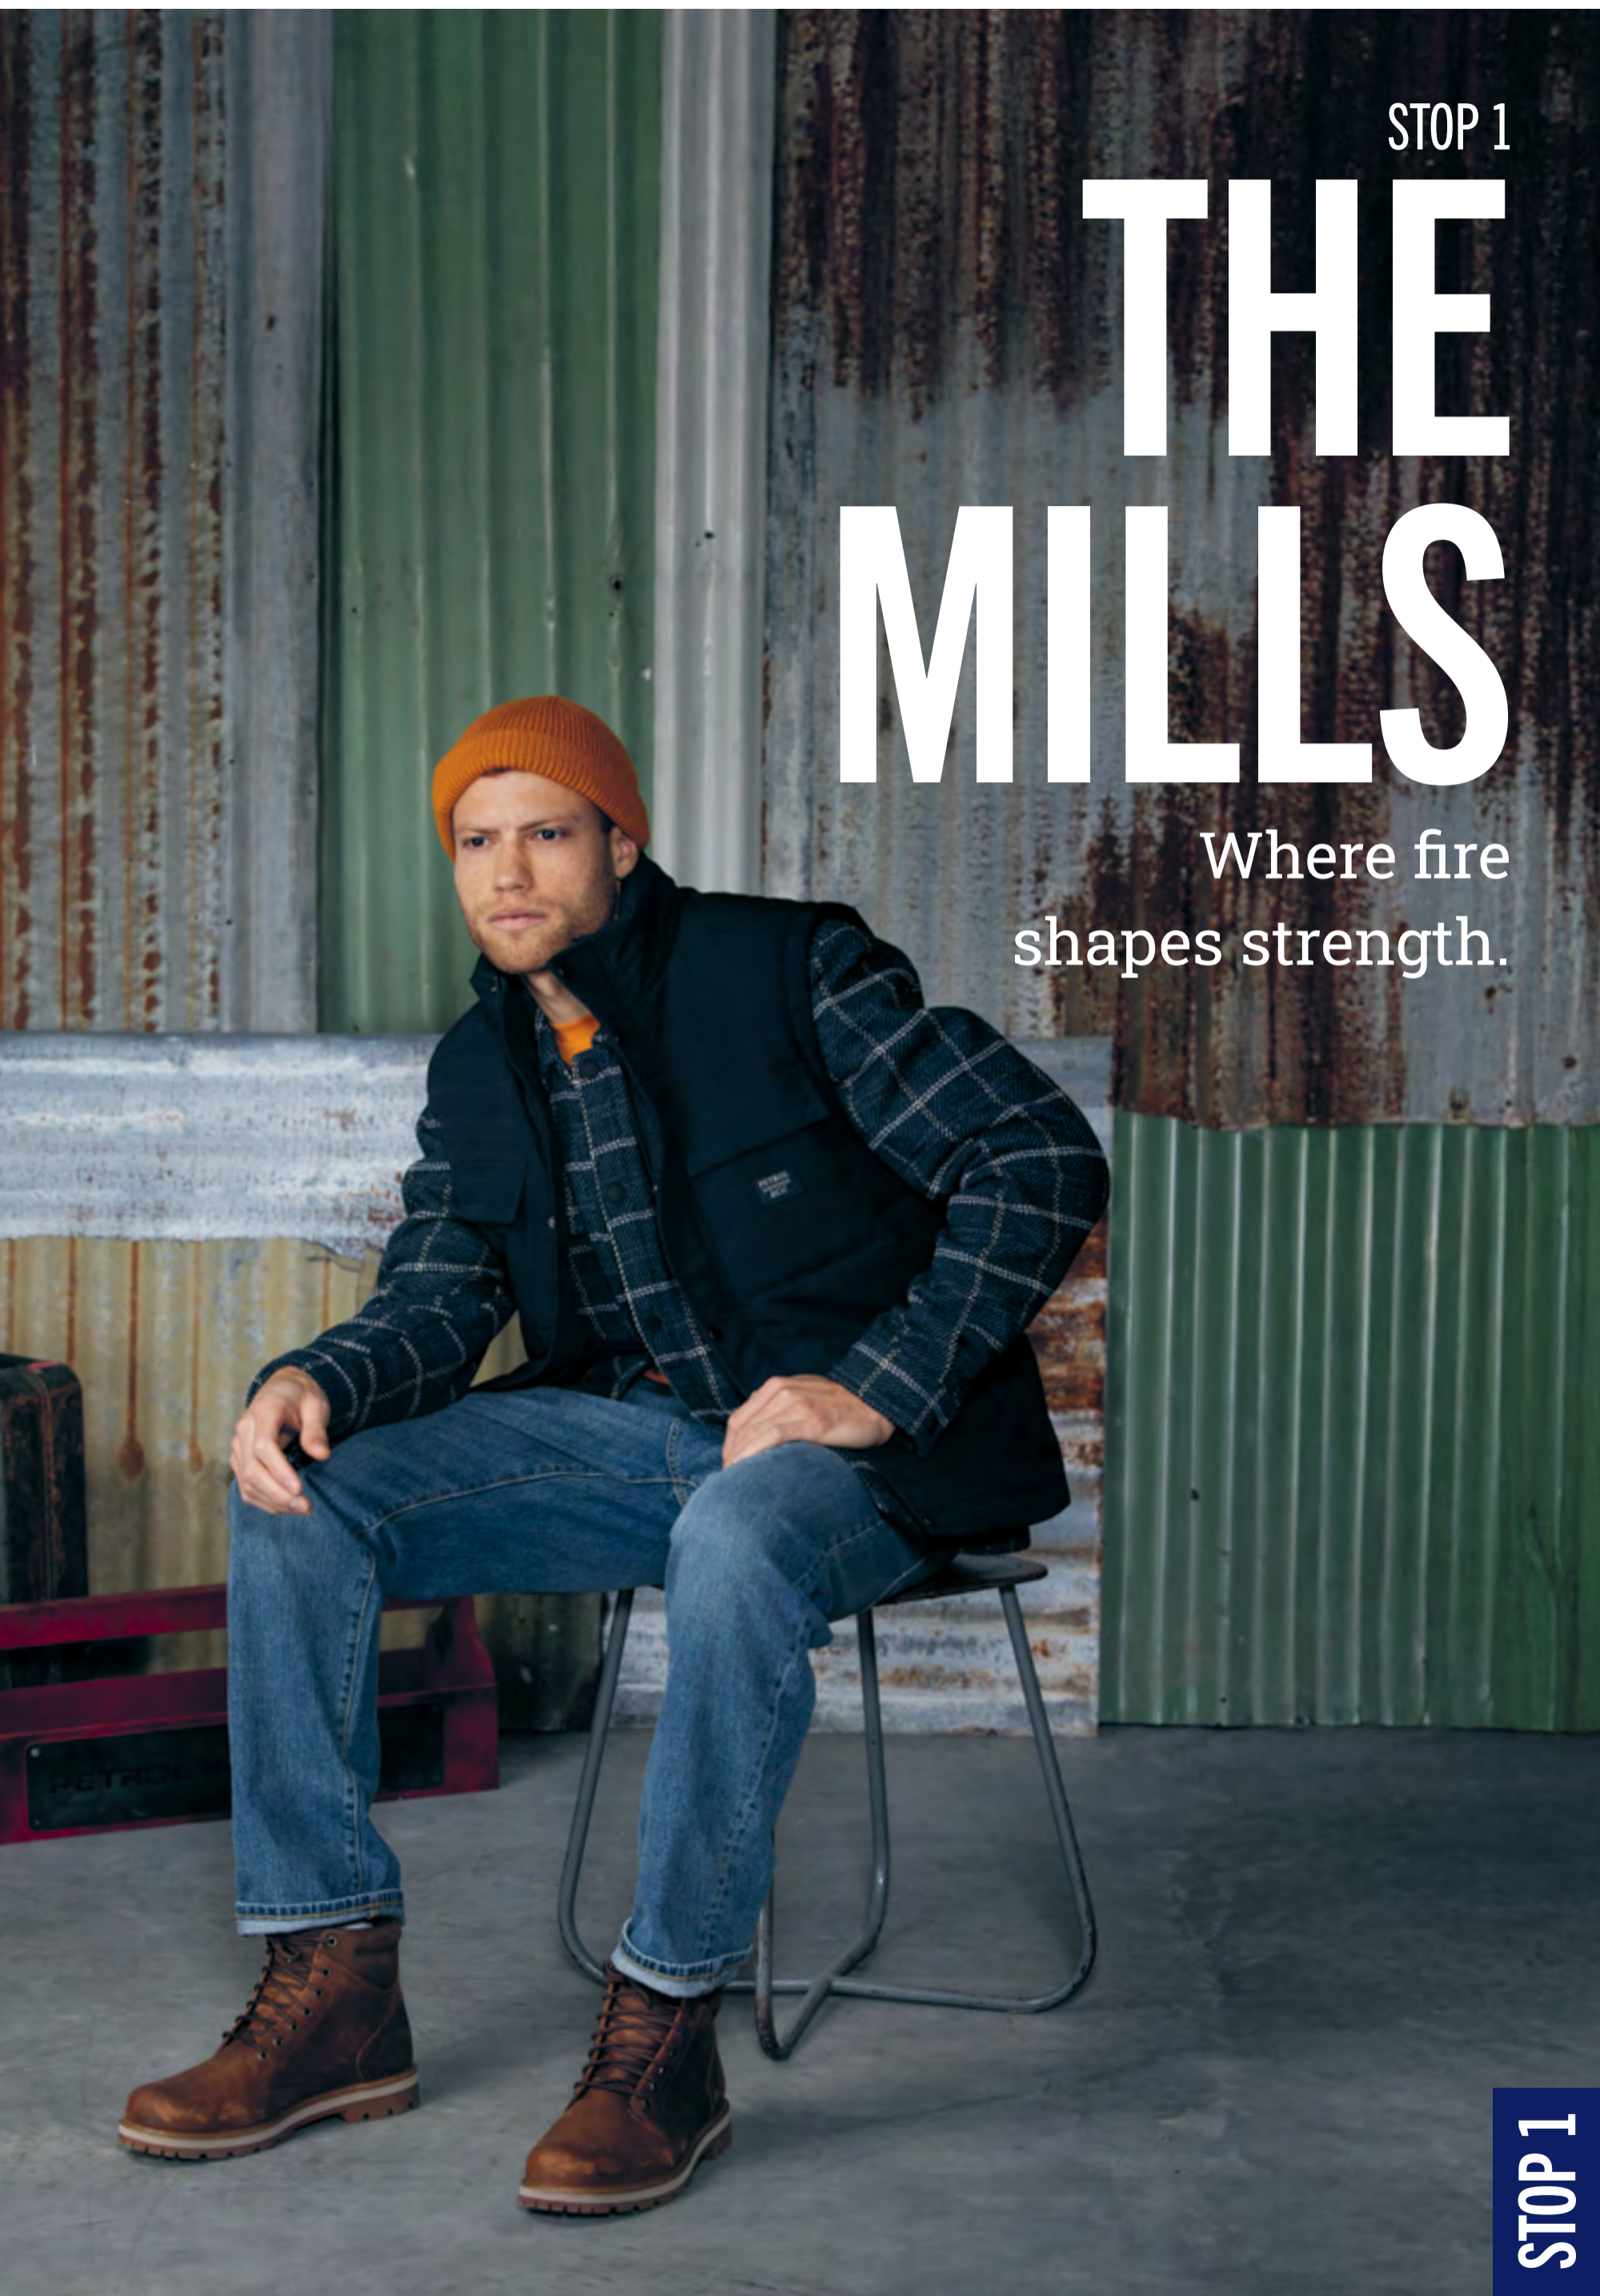

Where fire shapes strength.

The journey begins at the steel mills; vast, glowing structures that once forged the backbone of a nation. Inside, heat and metal collide. Sparks fly. Machines roar. The Petrol Man moves through a haze of smoke and dust, surrounded by pipes, beams and towering silhouettes of steel.

This world of fire and force translates directly into the first chapter of the collection.

Outerwear feels protective and robust, as if it could withstand sparks and heat: jackets with weight and substance, built to shield and support. Twill and denim are dense and compact, echoing the solid strength of industrial workwear. Colors are deep and powerful, with shades that seem tempered by smoke and flame, the kind of tones that look even better when worn hard.

In the Mills, strength is not a concept, it's a reality. The pieces born here are made to feel the same: tough, dependable and ready for long days in rough conditions.

THE RAILROADS

Where movement begins.

Leaving the mills behind, the Petrol Man follows the tracks. Steel rails stretch endlessly into the distance, crossing rivers, fields and towns. This is where movement began – where iron and coal were transported, where progress picked up speed.

The sound of gravel under his boots, the echo of distant trains, the faded paint on old stations; everything along the railroads tells a story of travel and transition.

This atmosphere becomes the backbone of the second drop. Silhouettes feel practical and familiar, drawing inspiration from traditional railroad uniforms: workwear jackets, overshirts and layers designed to function both on and off the tracks. Fabrics show character – striped textures and washed, garment-dyed finishes give the impression of garments that have seen long journeys and countless miles. Denim takes center stage as the foundation: reliable, rugged and ready to be worn day after day.

The color palette reflects the world along the lines: coal black, track grey, rust red, and other earthy, grounded tones that could have come straight from locomotives, steel bridges and weathered freight cars. It is a chapter built on movement and endurance, where every piece feels like it has already travelled with you.

STOP 3

THE QUARRIES

Strength carved from stone.

Deeper into Pennsylvania, the Petrol Man reaches the quarries; raw, carved landscapes that expose the bones of the earth. Here, sheer rock walls rise up on all sides. The ground is uneven, layered with gravel and stone.

The only sounds are engines, tools and the crunch of rock under heavy boots. This environment defines the final and most rugged part of the collection. The clothes in this chapter are made for cold, rough, demanding conditions. Outerwear is heavier and more protective, with shapes that feel ready for harsh weather and hard work. Knits have strong, tactile structures, reminiscent of fractured rock and cut stone. Flannels are brushed and warm, ideal for layering over tees and under jackets when temperatures drop.

The quarries also shape the palette: clay, slate, basalt, steel blue and other mineral-inspired tones give this part of the collection a grounded, elemental feel. Fabrics carry texture and depth, mirroring the rough surfaces of the terrain. Everything is designed to handle impact, friction and time. In the Quarries, nothing is polished and that is exactly what makes it real. This final stop stands for resilience: for clothing that doesn't back down when the environment gets challenging.
